Now that Cary and Apex have condemned land in New Hill for their sewage plant, let's examine the consequences:

Imagine church services in the First Baptist Church of New Hill or New Hill Baptist Church while smelling the sewage plant.

Southern Baptist Churches are notorious for Sunday dinner on the grounds. How would you like to have dinner on the grounds while smelling sewage from Cary and Apex?

New Hill Baptist Church just installed a play ground for the children of the community. Think it will get much use when the sewage plant goes into operation?

There are two nursing homes and many residences bordering the sewage plant site. Do you want your elderly parents to have to smell sewage from Cary and Apex? Do you want to raise your children where you have to smell sewage from Cary and Apex? (If you think sewage plants don't smell, drive down 55 East of Apex or North Harrison Avenue in Cary.)

Only one mile away, there is a great place for a sewage plant, next to Progress Energy's nuclear reactor. This land was once owned by residents of New Hill, before Progress Energy condemned the land and forced them from their homes. Progress Energy admits they took 14,000 more acres than they need.

Citizens should ask the Town Councils of Cary and Apex why they insist on destroying a community rather than putting the sewage plant on Progress Energy property, where no one lives.
